October (Eric Whitacre)
Eric Whitacre (b. 1970) is currently one of the most sought-after composers, conductors, and musical artists of modern times. A native of Nevada, Whitacre holds degrees from both University of Nevada-Las Vegas as well as The Juilliard School of Music, the latter of which he studied under John Corigliano and David Diamond, both composers of modern classical minimalism, which greatly impacted his own style. Whitacre has been the recipient of numerous awards and appointments as Artist in Residence, including Los Angeles’ Walt Disney Concert Hall.

Much of Eric Whitacre’s compositions utilize aleatoric extended harmonies, suspensions, and non-chordal tones to invoke a variety of colors, feelings, and vibrations for both the ensemble and audience, all of which are highly prevalent in his composition October. The work was originally written for wind band but has since been adapted for string orchestra and percussion through the arrangement of Paul Lavender from the Hal Leonard Corporation.

Strum (Jessie Montgomery)
Born in Manhattan in 1981, Jessie Montgomery is pioneering a new wave of music for composers of underrepresented backgrounds. Holding degrees from The Julliard School of Music and New York University, Montgomery has become a highly-sought composer and chamber musician within recent years and has earned coveted awards and titles such as the Leonard Bernstein Award from the ASCAP Foundation, strong ties to the Sphinx Organization, and a feature with The New York Philharmonic for their project celebrating one hundred years of equal voting rights. In regard to the work, the composer says the following:

Strum is the culminating result of several versions of a string quintet I wrote in 2006. It was originally written for the Providence String Quartet and guests of Community MusicWorks Players, then arranged for string quartet in 2008 with several small revisions. In 2012, the piece underwent its final revisions with a rewrite of both the introduction and the ending for the Catalyst Quartet in a performance celebrating the 15th annual Sphinx Competition.

Originally conceived for the formation of a cello quintet, the voicing is often spread wide over the ensemble, giving the music an expansive quality of sound. Within Strum I utilized texture motives, layers of rhythmic or harmonic ostinati that string together to form a bed of sound for melodies to weave in and out. The strumming pizzicato serves as a texture motive and the primary driving rhythmic underpinning of the piece. Drawing on American folk idioms and the spirit of dance and movement, the piece has a kind of narrative that begins with fleeting nostalgia and transforms into ecstatic celebration. (Jessie Montgomery)

Strange Travels (2014) (Nancy Galbraith)
American composer Nancy Galbraith was born in 1951 in Pittsburg, where she currently serves as chair of composition at the Carnegie Mellon University School of Music. She holds a bachelor’s degree from Ohio University and a master’s degree from West Virginia University. Galbraith’s music has earned praise for its rich harmonic texture, rhythmic vitality, emotional and spiritual depth, and wide range of expression. Her catalog includes works for symphony orchestras, concert choirs, wind ensembles, chamber ensembles and soloists playing a leading role in defining the sound of contemporary classical music.

Strange Travels was composed for the Carnegie Mellon Contemporary Ensemble and premiered in March 2014. The title alludes to the sensation of motion imparted by the music, through two aural landscapes of an unfamiliar, almost otherworldly nature. The first movement is a mostly fast-paced journey through a frontier of orchestral textures and colors. The second movement is slower and dreamier, with recurring accents from the electric string pizzicatos.

Serenata para Orquesta de Cuerdas y Percusión Op. 43 (1993) (Guillermo Zalcman)

Argentinian composer Guillermo Zalcman was born in Buenos Aires in 1956. He graduated from the Lopez Buchardo conservatory as a music and clarinet professor and studied composition with the Maestra Amalia Espora. Composer, professor, conductor, and promoter of new music, he has been president of the Argentinian Composers Associations since 2018. His catalog includes more than 115 pieces, 70 of them premiered in Latin America, North America, and Europe.

Written in 1993 and originally for full orchestra, the Serenade for String Orchestra and Percussion, is structured in three contrasting movements. Throughout the piece Zalcman explores South American rhythms, especially in the last movement which shares similarities with the “Malambo,” an Argentinian traditional dance. Movements I and III are full of energy and uplifting character. Meanwhile, movement II presents delicate melodic lines, expanded harmonies and solo passages.

Residua (Icli Zitella)

Venezuelan composer Icli Zitella was born in Caracas. After he completed composition studies in his own country, he pursued a master’s degree at Manhattan School of Music in New York City (2015). He worked as a violinist with the National Philharmonic Orchestra of his country and served as professor of theory at Mozarteum-Caracas School of Music. His works have been played by famous international soloists, such as Ab Koster, William VerMeulen, Lucy Shelton, and Dimitri Vassilakis. He won the Municipal Price in Caracas (2011), the UNESCO-Aschberg Bursaries for Artists (1999), and the first place in the Moisés Moleiro Piano Composition Contest (1992). His works include concert, chamber, orchestral, electronic, and incidental music, as well as film scores. He writes music in a wide variety of styles ranging from the classical and traditional to the popular and experimental.

Residua is the name given by medieval alchemists to the material left over from their experiments. The work evokes the process of making the “Philosopher’s Stone”: an adventure that generally led to failure, leaving behind only a few “residua” (“waste” in Latin). The composition revolves around a refrain that always reappears in a varied way. The contrasting sections are related to that refrain by certain interval characteristics. Some secondary motifs acquire relative importance, form new complexes, acquire a certain stability, and even create polyphonic textures close to the practice of traditional imitations. In general, this work tries to rescue old compositional models and uses the consonance-dissonance opposition within a free tonal framework.

Concertino (Andrzej Panufnik)

Andrzej Panufnik was a Polish composer, pianist, conductor, and teacher. He became one of the leading composers in his country and, as a conductor, was fundamental in the re-establishment of the Warsaw Philharmonic after World War II.

According to the composer, his Concertino for timpani, percussion, and Strings was composed both as a concert piece and as a study/test work for the Shell-LSO Scholarship percussion section.

In this work I wanted to take a fresh look at percussion and to emphasise especially the expressive, even the singing quality of the instruments: hence the title “song” for two of the movements. Rather than presenting conventional technical challenges or producing a variety of new gimmicks, my intention was to compose a test of true musicianship: to demonstrate quality of sound, precision and above all an understanding of the musical content of the work, its poetic element. Regarding musical language, as in my previous works, I was trying to achieve clarity and a sense of order through a self-imposed discipline. Thus the Concertino is based on one four-note cell (fa, sol, si, do), introduced at the beginning of the work by the tubular chimes. This cell, used both melodically and harmonically, emerges from time to time throughout the whole work to bring organic unity to the whole piece. (Andrzej Panufnik)
